

PRINCIPLES FOR PUBLIC ADVOCACY

Pennsylvania Council of Churches

Introduction

The Principles for Public Advocacy of the Pennsylvania Council of Churches contains the underlying principles for the Council's advocacy ministry. Because the Council's advocacy efforts often extend beyond those directed solely at federal or state legislators, these principles reflect a broader view of our responsibility to be faithful advocates, recognizing the call for all Christians to engage in faithful witness in all aspects of public life.

This document has traditionally been produced on a biennial basis. In the past, it was a document that provided both principles and a list of policy positions supported by the Council. In the 2003-2004 biennium, for the first time both the principles and policy positions were organized around the Biblical concepts of justice (economic, social, civil, environmental, and criminal) and shalom (health, wholeness, and peacemaking), and the document also contained printed reference to the denominational positions of the 43 member bodies of the Council. This way of organizing has worked well, and it is where the writing team started in formulating this document.

In the course of discussing how to present these this document, the writing team noted that the principles themselves, because they are based on Biblical concepts supported by member denominational positions, are not likely to require substantial updates for every biennium/legislative session. It is the policy positions and legislative priorities that are in need of change biennially as new legislation and policies are proposed and enacted, or as conditions (the economy, for example) change at the local, state, federal, and global levels. To that end, the writing team has elected to produce this latest Principles for Public Advocacy as a more permanent document, open to revision as necessary, but not necessarily on a biennial basis. Policy statements/position papers and priority issues for the biennium will be presented separately, beginning with the 2005-2006 biennium.

The policy positions continue to be derived from the principles presented in this document. They are designed, along with the Principles, to inform the Council's advocacy efforts, but not to cast specific efforts in stone; issues and priorities do not remain static during the course of a legislative session, and neither should the Council's advocacy efforts. This new presentation of the Principles with separate policy statements and a biennial statement of priorities provides additional flexibility to respond as advocacy needs arise.

A writing team comprised of the following persons wrote the first draft of the Principles:

- The Rev. Dr. Bruce Bouchard, Penn Central Conference, United Church of Christ and Chair, Public Advocacy Action Team
- Ms. Kathleen Daugherty, Lutheran Advocacy Ministry in Pennsylvania
- The Rev. Richard Guhl, Penn Northeast Conference, United Church of Christ
- Mr. Milton Leake, Diocese of Central Pennsylvania, Episcopal Church
- The Rev. Gary L. Harke, Executive Director, Pennsylvania Council of Churches
- The Rev. Sandra L. Strauss, Director of Public Advocacy, Pennsylvania Council of Churches

Several drafts of the document were read by the members of the Council's Public Advocacy Action Team and the Steering Committee prior to two readings by and final approval by the Council's Governing Board.

Purpose

It is the aim of the Governing Board and all who took part in crafting the Principles that they serve the following purposes:

- To provide principles that reflect the principles and policy positions of the member bodies of the Council, where those bodies are in agreement, and thus witness to those bodies' unity in Christ;
- To serve those member church bodies by providing a compilation of the Council's principles, with references indicating principles held in common;
- To provide the basis for the Council's policy positions and priorities for public advocacy; and
- To inform policy-makers concerning the principles that guide the Council's advocacy efforts.

Suggestions for use

For the 43 member bodies of the Council, here are some suggestions for use:

- Use this resource as the basis for adult classes.
- Place the document in the church or judicatory library for reference.
- Use the document at annual conferences as part of a workshop on ecumenical activity.
- Use the document as a guide for advocacy efforts by individuals, congregations, member church bodies, and other groups of concerned persons.
- Prepare groups of citizen advocates for legislative visits through study and analysis of particular topics.
- Review particular policy positions related to legislation and analyze the implications for action within the member church bodies.

Part I: Principles for Public Advocacy

Principles for Public Advocacy describes the values that the Pennsylvania Council of Churches' 43 member bodies believe should govern legislators' decisions. The Principles are organized around the Biblical concepts of justice and shalom, presented under the major categories of wholeness, health, reconciliation/peace, economic justice, social justice, civil justice, environmental justice, and criminal justice. Specific policy statements of the Council, along with priorities for legislative advocacy, are contained in separate documents that are revised on, at minimum, a biennial basis; the positions are derived from these deeply held principles. Together, the Principles and policy positions constitute the total current policy statements of the Pennsylvania Council of Churches. Part II of this document lists the church body and communion documents cited in the footnotes.

Preamble

The Pennsylvania Council of Churches envisions a Commonwealth characterized by a profound sense of justice and shalom in human relationships and social structures at all levels of society. Such justice is rooted in God's commandments to ancient Israel, in Jesus' teachings, and in the witness and life of the church throughout its history. Just as Scripture bears witness to a vision of justice on earth, so too Scripture shows us God's shalom, God's loving-kindness toward all Creation. This loving-kindness leads to a vision of wholeness, health, and reconciliation/peace in relationships and systems.¹

Life in a Commonwealth characterized by justice and shalom would be drastically different for most Pennsylvanians. While we acknowledge that it may not ever come to fruition, the Council supports a vision for a just Commonwealth that encompasses the principles contained in this document, presented as follows: All persons would receive respect, regardless of their place in society.

All would have a voice in government at all levels, and access would not be limited because of situational factors such as lack of wealth or distance, or demographic characteristics such as race, ethnicity, gender, sexual preference, or religious affiliation. All would have everything they need—living wage jobs, and adequate health care, housing, food, and education. No one would be discriminated against because of the color or his or her skin, gender, ethnicity, sexual orientation, disability, or economic status. All who are unable to work or care for themselves for reasons of health, disability, or economic climate—whether permanent or temporary—would receive adequate care and support. All who have run afoul of societal rules

He has told you, O mortal, what is good; and what does the Lord require of you but to do justice, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with your God?

Micah 6:8 (NRSV)

will be treated with dignity, with an eye toward rehabilitation and restoration. Governments, government institutions, businesses, and all other organizations and institutions would follow through on promises; government would protect civil liberties for all and take seriously its responsibility to work for the common good, and businesses and other organizations and institutions would treat employees fairly and contribute appropriately to our society. All would work to protect and sustain the environment, protecting the integrity of God's Creation.

This vision of justice and shalom for all Pennsylvanians, embodied in the Principles, is what provides the Pennsylvania Council of Churches with the impetus to engage in advocacy efforts on behalf of its member bodies and all Pennsylvanians. The Council believes that these principles will provide guidance for Council staff, member bodies, and individuals in establishing advocacy goals and priorities, and food for thought for those who represent citizens of the Commonwealth in each branch of government at both the state and federal levels—executive, legislative, and judicial.

There are eight particular areas of justice and shalom that the Council believes are crucial to the achievement of a just Commonwealth that reflects the loving-kindness God intends for creation: wholeness, health, reconciliation/peace, economic justice, social justice, civil justice, environmental justice, and criminal justice. Shalom, a Hebrew word typically defined as “peace,” actually represents a much broader meaning, encompassing well-being, health, prosperity, soundness, completeness, and wholeness. Theologian Cornelius Plantinga, Jr. defines sin as “the vandalism of shalom.” Justice reflects God's character—that which builds peace, pursues truth, shapes community, upholds right, and delivers the oppressed. Principles that apply within each of these areas are presented below, along with some examples of specific advocacy positions and efforts undertaken in the past.

Wholeness

Wholeness is achieved when persons know themselves to be worthy of respect simply because they are, each one, made in the image of God.

We experience wholeness in society when:

- the value of human beings is not based upon their monetary worth or power of position, upon their abilities or disabilities, upon their demographic characteristics, gender, culture, language, or sexual orientation, but rather upon their being part of the human family
- every child is nurtured and educated because each child is recognized as precious
- its most vulnerable citizens—the young, the old, the poor, the mentally or physically fragile are not penalized or made to suffer, but rather have access to all that helps create a decent life: adequate health care, housing, food, education, and nurture.²

Then God said, “Let us make humankind in our image, according to our likeness”...So God created humankind in his image, in the image of God he created them, male and female he created them.

- adequate income and provision of support services for persons with mental and/or physical challenges, regardless of cause of the disability.

Specific advocacy efforts have included:

- opposition to legislation that reduces impediments for utilities to shut off customers, permitting shutoffs in winter months.

Health

Our understanding of health comes from our belief that Christ is the great physician, for he “came that we might have life and have it abundantly” (John 10:10, NRSV).

Health means more than physical well-being. A Commonwealth that fosters healthy persons and communities exhibits high regard for those who are physically and mentally ill as well as those who are physically and mentally well. A healthy society does not promote activities that lead to addictions.

Each of you must give as you have made up your mind, not reluctantly or under compulsion, for God loves a cheerful giver. And God is able to provide you with every blessing in abundance, so that by always having enough of everything, you may share abundantly in every good work.

2 Corinthians 9:7-8 (NRSV)

In a healthy society, the well-being of all is a priority. Healthy persons and communities grow and flourish when society creates an environment that ensures that all have what they need to sustain them throughout every age and stage of life. There is adequate education to prepare individuals to live healthy lives and contribute to the health of society. Wages are adequate to provide a reasonable means of subsistence, and those who are unable to work receive what they need to sustain a healthy life. Given the importance of healing in the Biblical tradition, we affirm that all persons must have access to adequate and affordable health care,³ and not be forced to choose between health care and other necessary goods and services, such as food, shelter, and transportation.⁴

- support and promotion of the Children’s Health Insurance Program (CHIP)
- opposition to gambling expansion

Reconciliation/Peace

Peace and reconciliation between persons and within the systems of society are both matters of faith and the result of human beings’ partnership with God in God’s work throughout the world. Scripture gives a vision of a world at peace in numerous places; brokenness and sinfulness are not the final words for humankind. God is constantly at work healing the brokenness that exists in individual lives, in families, communities, congregations, political processes and systems and in the environment around us.

Peacemaking is the appropriate human response to the divine gift of peace, wholeness and reconciliation.⁵ God calls us to reconciliation: between individuals, within families and communities, and among nations. When faced with conflict and brokenness, our first response is to seek a peaceful solution that ensures the health and safety of all involved.

He shall judge between the nations, and shall arbitrate for many peoples; they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

Isaiah 2:4 (NRSV)

There will never be peace on earth as long as there is injustice. Biblical witness affirms over and over that those who are committed to peace need to work for justice for all of God’s people. Peace and justice are integral to faithfulness.⁶

Economic Justice

Economic justice is rooted in our awareness of abundance—abundance visible in creation and testified to by scripture. Beginning with a presupposition of abundance frees us to live in generosity, recognizing that there is enough for all. God's riches are not to be stored up selfishly in barns of our own building, but are rather to be shared generously by all. Since we are freed from the fear that we need to accumulate, we are also freed to affirm "enough" is sufficient for our needs and best for healthy human life and society.⁷

Look at the birds of the air; they neither sow nor reap nor gather into barns, and yet your heavenly Father feeds them.
Are you not of more value than they?

Matthew 6:26 (NRSV)

The whole of society is strengthened as its members participate in and contribute to the common good.⁸ We affirm the need to eliminate poverty for it destroys and degrades human lives.⁹ All people should be educated and empowered, to the extent possible, so that they can enjoy the benefits of economic opportunity.¹⁰ It is the Commonwealth's responsibility to provide a thorough and efficient education to every child. The failure of a society to provide adequate educational opportunities for children and youth and opportunities for gainful employment condemns some people to poverty and weakens the fabric of community life.¹¹ When people have no hope for a better future, crime increases and society suffers.

We need to provide adequate funding and tools to sustain families as family members enter into the workforce, and not penalize families when members become employed.¹² This includes access to affordable housing, childcare, health care, transportation, and any other services that support families' and individuals' ability to be productive members of the Commonwealth's workforce. We must also ensure that all persons are guaranteed income security when they reach retirement age or are no longer able to work for reasons of health or other disabilities. Federal and state governments have a responsibility to ensure that government and private programs that provide such security remain in place and are funded adequately, and businesses have a responsibility to protect and uphold programs such as health care coverage and pension plans that preserve workers' economic security. Citizens of the Commonwealth also need adequate safeguards to ensure that their income and assets are protected from abusive systems that threaten economic security, such as predatory lending practices.

Do not store up for yourselves treasures on earth, where moth and rust consume and where thieves break in and steal; but store up for yourselves treasures in heaven.... For where your treasure is, there your heart will be also.

Isaiah 3:14b-15 (NRSV)

Through taxation, society provides for the common good. Taxation is a shared responsibility of both businesses and individuals.¹⁶ Taxation in general should exclude income sufficient to keep reporting households above poverty guidelines. Poverty guidelines should be set so that households earning income to this level are self-sustaining. Progressive taxation (systems that are weighted toward those who have more—generally based on income) is preferable to regressive systems (those that weigh more heavily on persons at lower income levels—such as property or sales taxes). Gambling is a particularly poor way to raise state revenues, as it weighs most heavily on the poor, the elderly, and those prone to addictions.¹⁷

The Council:

- out of concern for the poor, rejects discrimination based on economic status
- affirms the need to eliminate poverty as a destructive and dehumanizing force in people's lives, and also affirms the goal of self-sufficiency for those caught in a cycle of poverty and welfare dependency

Specific advocacy efforts have included:

- supporting the reauthorization of Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF) at a level that maintains adequate supports for eligible persons and families
- supporting legislation that would raise the minimum wage in Pennsylvania

Social Justice

Social justice is rooted in our awareness that God values all people without regard to any identifying characteristics. The Bible affirms that every person is made in the image of God. God values all people in their rich diversity, and therefore we support full civil rights for all persons.¹⁸ Actions that discriminate against people on the basis of race, ethnicity, gender, class, age, or sexual orientation are sins and a rejection of the teachings of Jesus Christ. We commit ourselves as communities of faith to eliminate all forms of institutional discrimination.¹⁹

This vision is not reality and so we affirm the need to continue the legal struggle against discrimination and prejudice, personal or systemic. Legislation should take into account the historic suffering certain classes or groups of people have endured because of race, ethnicity, gender, age, class, and other dehumanizing manifestations of sin. Furthermore, legislation should consider the disparate impact seemingly neutral laws may have on such groups and classes and be modified accordingly. Programs of education, credit, housing, employment and income, health and banking should address historic injustices and wrongs.²⁰

Then Peter began to speak to them: "I truly understand that God shows no partiality, but in every nation anyone who fears him and does what is right is acceptable to him.

Civil Justice

Scripture describes a good society as one in which those who act with sovereignty provide justice for all. In a democracy, representatives of the people act with sovereignty, and need to provide justice.

A just Commonwealth protects the rights of individuals and groups, and imposes corresponding responsibilities on the whole community that support and sustain the common good.²² A just Commonwealth ensures that all persons have a voice in government at all levels—including the right to vote—and that access is not limited because of situational factors such as economic disadvantages or distance, or demographic characteristics such as race, ethnicity, gender, religious affiliation, disability, or sexual orientation. We affirm that all persons convicted of felonies who have completed their jail sentences and have entered back into society should have the right to vote.

A just society welcomes the stranger—immigrants, the disabled, all who are marginalized or disenfranchised in any way—in our midst, and offers full civil rights for all persons and holds accountable those who infringe upon the civil rights of others. A just society does not seek to limit or eliminate civil liberties in the promotion or implementation of certain government policies.

Society and the law should enhance human lives, promoting the dignity and worth of each human being. At the same time, a just society calls all persons to contribute to the common good by achieving their full potential.

We affirm the principle of separation of church and state; this principle assures an appropriate role of government, guaranteeing that in a just and religiously diverse society, each person has the right to practice his or her religion according to individual conscience.²³ We also maintain, however, that government also has a responsibility to ensure that particular religious views or positions are not involuntarily imposed on persons in public settings such as schools or in public meetings.

Example Policy Positions/Efforts—Civil Justice

The Council:

- is in favor of campaign finance reform for the sake of integrity of government and the processes of governing
- supports the enforcement of the Americans with Disabilities Act

Specific advocacy efforts have included:

- support of campaign finance reform and lobbyist disclosure legislation to promote government accountability
- opposing legislation that would erode separation of church and state by permitting partisan activity in the local church

Environmental Justice

We believe creation belongs to God, and that we are called to act as stewards of creation on God's behalf. Our stewardship makes us stakeholders. We envision a Commonwealth that honors the integrity of God's good creation and acknowledges our dependence upon and solidarity with creation. Therefore, decisions that would affect creation require careful discussion among stakeholders.²⁴ We support government decisions related to the land and the environment that eliminate racial, sexual, economic, or any other discrimination that occurs when people have little or no voice in decisions affecting them.²⁵

Within this context, we hold up the principle of sustainability, which suggests priorities that may include, but not be limited to: protection of species and their habitats; preservation of clean land, air and water; reduction of wastes; care of the land; and greater responsibility in the use of energy.²⁶

Dangerous outcomes result when short-term practices such as human population pressures, excessive consumption, and abuse of the global climate and the ozone layer continue unabated. Sustainability results when the quality of life for future generations is not compromised by current practices and when decisions affecting an immediate locale do not ignore the larger impact on the entire planet and its ecosystems.²⁷

God saw everything that he had made, and indeed, it was very good.

Genesis 1:31a (NRSV)

We support economic growth achieved through implementing sustainable practices and not at the cost of environmental degradation.

Because sustainable environmental practices require committed, long-term involvement from everyone, we challenge both government policy-makers and persons within our congregations and church bodies to make personal and political decisions today that honor tomorrow.

Criminal Justice

Criminal justice requires a balance between the rights of victims, the good of society, and the rehabilitation of the perpetrators of crimes. We want a criminal justice system that is just for all involved.²⁸ We believe that all persons entering into the judicial system, regardless of race, ethnicity, gender, class, religion or sexual orientation have a right to due process and equal protection before a representative, impartial, and independent judiciary, and that the role of courts is to provide full access to the legal system and to promote equal justice for all.

We recognize that prevention of crime is the best way to keep persons out of the criminal justice system. To that end, we encourage the Commonwealth to provide a good quality education for all children and economic opportunities for all adults.²⁹

In that day the Lord of hosts will be... a spirit of justice to the one who sits in judgment.

Isaiah 28:5-6 (NRSV)

We envision a Commonwealth whose criminal justice system provides:

- protection, so all may live in safe and secure communities;
- appropriate restoration to those who have been victimized by offenders; and
- opportunities for rehabilitation and redemption of those violating the Commonwealth's laws.³⁰

Consequently, we believe there is no room for vengeance and retribution in the Commonwealth's criminal justice system. Because we believe every soul is redeemable, we oppose capital punishment in any form because it denies opportunity for rehabilitation and restoration and is often racist and classist in its application.³¹ We urge greater discretion for judges in sentencing and fewer mandatory-sentencing laws, so judges can look at the total picture of each case and person before the court.³² Sentencing convicted offenders to community service programs should be a regular practice. Incarceration should be limited to dangerous and/or repeat offenders who prey upon the community.

Rehabilitation and restoration of the offender to her/his community should be the first priority of the corrections system.³³ We urge educational projects aimed at basic literacy skills for all inmates, job or vocational training, expanding work-leave opportunities, and family-leave for qualified prisoners as a means of easing their reentry into society. Since the family is an integral part of any prisoner's rehabilitation, prisoners should be housed in facilities as close to home as possible to facilitate family visitation and support.

For some offenders, rehabilitation is difficult. These persons need to be housed in humane, secure settings, and prevented from further harming society for as long a time as necessary. It is essential, however, that attempts be made to rehabilitate even the most hardened offender.

I was in prison, and you visited me.

Matthew 25:36b (NRSV)

All inmates must be guaranteed the right of religious expression, including opportunity for communal and sacramental worship under the leadership of ordained or otherwise accredited clergy or religious leaders.³⁴ Inmates should not, however, be subject to forced practice of a specific form of religious expression.

Because bail requirements discriminate against the poor and others without access to money, we support releasing without bail those accused of non-felony crimes on their own recognizance and we oppose the use of bail to achieve what is commonly called preventative detention—that is, as a means to detain persons without due process rights.³⁵

Summary

Principles for Public Advocacy offers the Pennsylvania Council of Churches' vision for the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and society as a whole. The eight sections following the preamble present specific principles for each of the areas of shalom and justice described in the Preamble, along with the theological basis supported by scriptural references and denominational positions of the Council's member church bodies. This document provides the basis for development of comprehensive policy positions and setting of specific priorities for public advocacy.

Separate policy statements on broad areas of advocacy that include more specific positions in light of the Principles will be developed and modified as issues are raised and/or as they evolve. These policy statements will be available to all who have an interest in the Council's positions on issues of interest, including, but not limited to Council members, interested individuals and organizations, and legislators at both the state and federal levels. They will be made available at the Council's website at www.pachurches.org.

The Council also develops biennial statements of legislative priorities for each two-year legislative session. Legislative priorities statements are revised as necessary during each session in consultation with the Public Advocacy Action Team, and are rewritten in their entirety every two years as each new legislative session begins.

Complete references for the supporting documentation cited in the footnotes are contained in Part II of this document.

Part II: Selected Denominational References

The following documents from various member bodies of the Pennsylvania Council of Churches and, in some cases, denominational statements, are referenced in this Principles for Public Advocacy document. A simple one or two-word abbreviation that will be used to refer to the documents in the footnotes for the Principles precedes information on each document.
